

Account management

IN ORDER TO PROVIDE EXCELLENT SERVICE AND TO MAINTAIN KEY ACCOUNTS IT IS IMPORTANT TO KNOW WHAT YOUR CUSTOMERS EXPECT FROM THE RELATIONSHIP.

Many organisations lose sight of what their customers need and want. They usually focus on their products or services rather than understanding what their customers expect from them. In order to provide excellent service and to maintain key accounts it is important to ask customers what they expect from the relationship. By meeting the expectations of your key customers you will generate more loyalty, more referral business and higher levels of customer satisfaction. This in turn will help you develop long term partnerships with customers and gain greater “share of wallet”.

How good are you at account management?

Ask yourself the following:

1. I have a good understanding of my customer’s needs.
2. I understand what clients expect from me and my organisation.
3. I communicate with each of my customers differently based on their individual behavioural style.
4. I can confidently and successfully negotiate with my customers.
5. I always deliver upon my promise to my customer.
6. I understand what problems are faced by my customers and provide them customised solutions.
7. I provide quick and accurate responses to my customer’s queries.
8. I value my customer feedback and use it to improve future service.
9. I have a service recovery program in place if a customer perceives a failure in my organisation’s offering.
10. I aim at building and maintaining long term relationships with customers.
11. I ensure that there are no gaps between expectations and deliverables.
12. I actively listen to what my customer has to say.
13. I regularly receive referrals from my customers.
14. I always go out of my way to help my customer.
15. I make notes and keep a record of all my customer conversations.
